Introductory Note

This compilation, prepared by the Historical Office of the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD), presents information about the Department of Defense (DoD) organization and its key officials since its establishment in 1947.

The scope of the work is a Department-wide listing of senior officials, but it does not purport to be comprehensive. “Key Officials” is not official terminology, nor is this a top-down listing of officials in order of precedence or reporting authority. It lists both Presidential appointed, Senate-confirmed (PAS) as well as non-PAS officials. It includes civilian officials in the Office of the Secretary of Defense and the military departments as well as the top leadership of the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS), the Combatant Commands, and certain field activities and agencies.

This compilation includes titles of some official positions that have been superseded by new titles or organizational changes. The text indicates all instances where this has occurred. Where an official position has a direct lineal predecessor with a similar scope of functions, the prior position is either included with the current position or the text indicates where the prior position can be found elsewhere in the publication.

In most entries, the effective date of incumbency is the initial swearing-in date. Officials assume office after being sworn in, usually followed by a ceremonial swearing in days or weeks later. Dates of DoD directives confirming establishment of positions and prescribing functions may appear months and sometimes years later. Human Resources personnel records, especially for the first several decades of the Department, are imperfect. Offices are often without a permanent appointee for periods ranging from days to years. During many of these periods, there are officials in an “acting” or a “performing the duties of” capacity. In other instances, there is no indication of an acting official, and a time gap is evident. For the most part, acting officials have been de facto rather than formally designated, and there may be statutory limitations on how long an individual may be considered “acting.”

This edition corrects errors that appeared in the 2004 edition and brings the information up to date (as of June 2014). Please call any errors that appear in this publication to the attention of the OSD Historical Office.

II. Department of Defense: Historical Background

The Department of Defense (DoD) came into existence following a 3-year debate regarding the wisdom of unifying the armed forces, which had historically been split between the Department of War and the Department of the Navy. This deliberation concluded with the enactment of the National Security Act of 1947 (Public Law [PL] 80–253), approved by President Harry S. Truman on 26 July 1947. The legislation divided the Department of War into the Department of the Army and the Department of the Air Force, created a National Military Establishment to provide “authoritative coordination and unified direction” to the three military departments, and provided for a Secretary of Defense to head the new organization. To assist the Secretary in carrying out his responsibilities, the legislation authorized three special assistants and provided for a War Council, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, a Munitions Board, and a Research and Development Board. The act also authorized establishment of unified commands—organizations composed of elements of two or more Armed Services formed to carry out a broad or continuing mission. (A subset of unified commands, not actually mentioned in the law, became known as specified commands, since they were composed of elements of a single Armed Service.) President Truman already had approved a Unified Command Plan (UCP) in December 1946 that envisioned a structure of seven geographic commands to cover the major regions of the world.

On 17 September 1947, James V. Forrestal took the oath of office as the first Secretary of Defense. He soon found the powers assigned to his office insufficient for the task confronting him and early in 1949 recommended substantial changes, many of them incorporated in amendments to the National Security Act approved on 10 August 1949 (PL 81–216). By the time Congress passed this legislation, Secretary Forrestal had resigned from office, and Louis A. Johnson had succeeded him.

The 1949 amendments renamed the National Military Establishment as the Department of Defense. A more substantive change recategorized the Departments of the Army, Navy, and Air Force as “military departments in lieu of their prior status as Executive Departments,” thus making it clear that they ranked one step below the executive-level Department of Defense. Another provision deleted language in the original law that “all powers and duties relating to such departments not specifically conferred upon the Secretary of Defense by this Act shall be retained by each of their respective Secretaries.” This more firmly established that the Secretary of Defense had full “direction, authority, and control” over the entire Department. Other amendments authorized a Deputy Secretary of Defense, converted the three special assistants to Assistant Secretaries (one of them designated as the Comptroller), created the position of Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, expanded the size of the Joint Staff from 100 to 210 officers, and included a new Title IV providing for uniform budgetary and fiscal procedures throughout the Department. Another amendment established an Armed Forces Policy Council to advise the Secretary on broad policies regarding the armed forces. The Secretary of Defense served as chairman, with the power of decision. Members of the Council were the Secretary, the Deputy Secretary, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the Secretaries and uniformed heads of the Army, Navy, and Air Force. This body took the place of the War Council created by the National Security Act of 1947.
Although the term did not appear anywhere in the National Security Act, the staff and immediate supporting bureaucracy for the Secretary of Defense quickly became known as the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD). It functioned as the headquarters element over all of DoD. Although OSD was responsible for a massive organization of 1.46 million Active-duty personnel, plus a large number of Reservists and civilian employees, it was still a very small organization in June 1950. The three Assistant Secretaries handled the portfolios of Comptroller, Legal and Legislative Affairs, and Administration and Public Affairs; an Assistant to the Secretary managed Foreign Military Assistance; and a mix of 10 boards, councils, and committees dealt with issues ranging from medical services to munitions. The number of personnel, civilian and military, in OSD never exceeded 400 prior to the outbreak of the Korean War in June 1950. Thereafter, the requirements of overseeing a major conflict and strengthening the integrated action of the armed forces ensured that the organization would grow far beyond that small beginning.

In September 1950, President Truman named retired General of the Army George C. Marshall, formerly Chief of Staff of the Army and Secretary of State, to head the Department of Defense. This required special legislation by Congress because the National Security Act stipulated that no officer who had been on active duty in the armed forces within 10 years could be eligible for appointment. Public Law 81–788 authorized General Marshall’s appointment on 21 September 1950. At the end of one year, which was all General Marshall had agreed to serve, Deputy Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett succeeded him.

In 1952, Congress called for creation of the Defense Supply Management Agency. Although it was short-lived, this was the first defense agency, the designation for an organization performing a supply or service activity common to more than one military department. President Truman ordered the establishment of the National Security Agency on 5 December 1952, ensuring that the concept of relying on DoD-wide supporting organizations would continue.

After entering office in 1953, President Dwight D. Eisenhower directed his administration to review the organization of the armed forces. The Committee on Department of Defense Organization, usually referred to by the name of its chairman, Nelson A. Rockefeller, submitted a report to the Secretary of Defense on 11 April 1953. At the end of the month the President transmitted to Congress Reorganization Plan No. 6, based on the recommendations of the committee. This plan became effective on 30 June 1953 when Congress failed to reject it within 60 days.

The reorganization gave greater management flexibility to the Secretary of Defense. The President’s message accompanying the plan made it clear that no function in the Department could be carried out independent of the authority of the Secretary of Defense and that the Secretaries of the military departments were to be, in addition to heads of their departments, the principal agents of the Secretary of Defense for the management and direction of the defense establishment. The Reorganization Plan abolished several statutory boards and positions in the Office of the Secretary of Defense, transferring their functions to the Secretary of Defense. In addition, it authorized six additional Assistant Secretaries, bringing the total of such positions to nine (Comptroller, Manpower and Personnel, Legislation and Public Affairs, International Security Affairs, Research and Development, Applications Engineering, Supply and Logistics, Properties and Installations, and Health and Medical), and a General Counsel, and gave the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff greater authority in managing the Joint Staff. There also was an Assistant to the Secretary for Atomic Energy.

After a review of the existing organization by the Second Hoover Commission and Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy, President Eisenhower recommended further organizational changes in the Department in a special message to Congress on 3 April 1958. The Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1958 (PL 85–599), approved on 6 August 1958, embodied most of these recommendations, to include reducing the number of Assistant Secretaries from nine to seven in OSD and from four to three in each of the military departments, authorizing reorganization of the Joint Staff, and expanding it from 210 to 400 officers. The new legislation increased still further the responsibilities of the Secretary of Defense, particularly in the operational direction of the armed forces and in research and development.

The 1958 act established a new chain of command running directly from the President through the Secretary of Defense to the unified and specified commanders, who were given “full operational command” over the forces assigned to them. This change abolished the former system under which orders went to the military departments acting as executive agents before reaching the unified and specified commands. On 31 December 1958, the Secretary of Defense issued DoD Directive 5100.1, which brought the Joint Chiefs of Staff into the chain of operational command by delegating to them his authority to exercise operational direction over the unified and specified commands. The directive retained a second chain of command through the Secretaries of the military departments to handle support activities, such as training and equipping forces.

In recognition of the increasing importance of research and development activities, the 1958 act established the position of Director of Defense Research and Engineering. The new director was to be not only the principal adviser to the Secretary of Defense in all scientific and technological matters but also the supervisor of all research and engineering activities in the Department of Defense and the director and controller of those activities that the Secretary of Defense felt required centralized direction. Among the activities that came under control of the new director was the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, created by Congress in legislation passed on 12 February 1958 (PL 85–325).

Frequent meetings between Secretary of Defense Thomas S. Gates, Jr., and the Joint Chiefs of Staff achieved improved policy coordination by 1960. Gates also established the Defense Communications Agency in 1960 to improve economy and efficiency in the telecommunications field.

Starting in 1961, Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara used the powers granted by the 1958 Reorganization Act to consolidate related activities. He combined the functions of the Assistant Secretary for Supply and Logistics and Assistant Secretary for Properties and Installations under a new Assistant Secretary for Installations and Logistics and transferred the functions of the Assistant Secretary for Health and Medical to the Assistant Secretary for Manpower. He assigned the vacated Assistant Secretary positions to the Assistant Secretary for Civil Defense and the Deputy Director of Defense Research and Engineering. When the Office of Civil Defense moved in 1964 to the Office of the Secretary of the Army, that Assistant Secretary position went to the new Assistant Secretary for Administration. In 1965, the Systems Analysis Office received Assistant Secretary rank with the transfer to it of the Assistant Secretary position held by the Deputy Director of Defense Research and Engineering.

Simultaneously, the organization of the military departments changed functionally to more clearly parallel the Office of the Secretary of Defense. In 1967, Congress authorized an additional Assistant Secretary position for Manpower and Reserve Affairs for each of the military departments.

In 1961, Secretary Robert S. McNamara established the U.S. Strike Command to bring under joint command the combat-ready forces of the U.S. Strategic Army Corps and the Air Force’s Tactical Air Command. Also in that year, he created the Defense Intelligence Agency to assume responsibility for various intelligence functions previously assigned to the military departments. The National Military Command Center became operational in 1962. Commonly referred to as the “War Room,” it provided a centralized capability in the Pentagon to monitor events and issue operational orders.

To achieve better use of resources, Secretary McNamara initiated a new Planning, Programming, and Budgeting System (PPBS) in 1961, including a 5-year forecast of forces and costs, supplemented by systems analysis or “cost effectiveness” studies. Further centralization of common support activities came with the establishment of the Defense Supply Agency in 1961 and the Defense Contract Audit Agency in 1965.

In 1969, Secretary Melvin R. Laird revised management procedures to link planning and budgeting more closely and to ensure wider participation in decisionmaking. Deputy Secretary David Packard established the Defense Systems Acquisition Review Council in May 1969 to advise the Secretary of Defense at critical decision points in the development and procurement of new weapons systems. The revised acquisition procedure also reemphasized the primary responsibility of the military departments for executing these programs and strengthened the authority of the project managers for each major system.

Establishment of the position of Assistant Secretary of Defense (ASD) for Health and Environment followed congressional authorization in November 1969 for an eighth Assistant Secretary to manage health affairs. A ninth Assistant Secretary, authorized in December 1971, managed telecommunications functions. Elimination of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Administration in November 1971 made available an Assistant Secretary position for the new Assistant Secretary of Defense for Intelligence. With Secretary Laird’s strong support, Congress authorized a second Deputy Secretary of Defense in October 1972, but no one held the position until late 1975. Laird had wanted a total of three Deputy Secretaries, with each overseeing a major group of functions within the Department, so that fewer positions reported directly to him.

Although the functional responsibilities of some Assistant Secretaries changed, the number of such positions—nine—remained constant from 1971 until 1977. In April 1973, Secretary Elliot L. Richardson established the position of Assistant Secretary of Defense for Legislative Affairs concurrently with the redesignation of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Systems Analysis as the Director of Defense Program Analysis and Evaluation. The Assistant Secretary for Program Analysis and Evaluation replaced the latter position in February 1974 after renaming of the position of Assistant Secretary of Defense for Telecommunications to Director, Telecommunications and Command and Control Systems.

The defense agency concept expanded substantially in 1971 and 1972 with the establishment of the Defense Mapping Agency to consolidate most mapping, charting, and geodetic activities of the military services; the Defense Investigative Service to exercise centralized control over personnel security investigations; the Defense Security Assistance Agency to supervise the administration and execution of the Military Assistance and Military Sales Programs; and the Defense Civil Preparedness Agency, the successor of the Army’s Office of Civil Defense.

Secretary Laird disestablished the U.S. Strike Command at the close of 1971, assigned its areas of geographic responsibility to other unified commands, and constituted a new U.S. Readiness Command that was responsible for providing the general reserve of combat-ready forces to reinforce the other unified commands.

Many of these changes reflected the July 1970 recommendations of the Blue Ribbon Defense Panel appointed by the President and the Secretary of Defense in 1969 to undertake an overall review and evaluation of the organization and management of the Department of Defense.

A comprehensive review in the mid-1970s of the worldwide military command structure resulted in the consolidation or elimination of 19 major headquarters and reductions in other headquarters and defense agency staffs. As part of this effort, two unified commands, the Alaskan Command and the Continental Air Defense Command, ceased operations on 30 June 1975. On the same date, the Aerospace Defense Command gained enlarged responsibilities. In 1976, there was a realignment of staff elements in the Office of the Secretary of Defense and the Organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to eliminate unwarranted duplication in related functional areas and to reduce the number of personnel serving in Department headquarters.

Additional organizational changes made during 1976 pertained principally to intelligence. Responsibility for these functions went to a second Deputy Secretary of Defense. Subsequently, the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Intelligence gained the additional designation of Director of Defense Intelligence, charged with line as well as staff authority for intelligence activities. The position of Inspector General (IG) for Intelligence also came into being to provide for independent oversight of the legality and propriety of all defense foreign intelligence and foreign counterintelligence activities.

In February 1977, the Military Airlift Command became a specified command under the Joint Chiefs of Staff, with the Air Force retaining responsibility for administrative and logistical support of the command.

Secretary of Defense Harold Brown made progress in 1977 and 1978 on his predecessor’s goal of reducing the number of persons reporting directly to him, but the method of accomplishing that would be different than Laird had envisioned. Instead of expanding the number of Deputy Secretaries, Public Law 95–140 of 21 October 1977 established the new management level of Under Secretary of Defense, falling in seniority between the Secretary/Deputy Secretary and the Assistant Secretaries. The legislation abolished the positions of the second Deputy Secretary of Defense and the Director of Defense Research and Engineering and established two new positions, Under Secretary of Defense for Policy and Under Secretary of Defense for Research and Engineering. Earlier in the year transfers of functional responsibilities reduced the number of Assistant Secretaries to seven and eliminated the position of Director for Command, Control, and Communications. Most of the defense agencies that had typically reported to the Secretary of Defense came under the direction of one of the Under Secretaries or Assistant Secretaries at this time. At this point, however, most Assistant Secretaries still reported directly to the Secretary of Defense.

In June 1979, Secretary Brown established the Defense Audiovisual Agency to provide centrally managed acquisition, distribution, and depository support and services for selected audiovisual products to all Department of Defense components. The following month, dissolution of the Defense Civil Preparedness Agency led to transfer of civil defense responsibilities outside DoD to the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

A number of organizational changes took place in 1981. In January, the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Program Analysis and Evaluation became the Director of Program Analysis and Evaluation. In March, the Assistant Secretary for Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence became the Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence. In April, the Office of the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy gained the new position of Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Policy, which took over some of the duties of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs. Unlike most other areas of OSD such as Logistics and Personnel, which were organized around well-defined functions, the Policy office would undergo frequent changes as new administrations adapted it to emphasize key elements of their national security agendas.

April 1981 also brought creation of the Office of the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Review and Oversight to coordinate the efforts of the Department’s auditors, inspectors, and investigators. In May, the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Legislative Affairs became the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Legislative Affairs. In August, the Defense Legal Services Agency came into being to provide legal advice, services, and support for specified organizations and functions within the Department of Defense.

On 8 September 1982, the fiscal year (FY) 1983 Defense Authorization Act created the new Office of the Department of Defense Inspector General (IG), replacing the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Review and Oversight. At the same time, the IG assumed the duties of the Defense Audit Service, which dissolved. The Inspector General for Intelligence became the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Intelligence Oversight in December 1982.

The FY84 Defense Authorization Act (24 September 1983) contained provisions for four new Assistant Secretary positions, leading to establishment of Assistant Secretaries of Defense for Development and Support; Research and Technology; Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence; and Reserve Affairs. In addition, this law mandated establishment of an Office of Operational Test and Evaluation.

A Presidential directive in January 1984 established the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization as a defense agency reporting directly to the Secretary of Defense. Secretary Weinberger announced on 30 November 1984 plans to establish a new unified command, U.S. Space Command, to centralize operational responsibilities for use of military space systems. In April 1985, he directed the disestablishment of the Defense Audiovisual Agency, effective 30 September 1985, and the transfer of its functions to the military departments.

The newly established Assistant Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Logistics in July 1985 assumed the acquisition management functions of the Under Secretary of Defense for Research and Engineering and the installations and logistics functions of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower, Installations, and Logistics. Simultaneously, the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower, Installations, and Logistics became the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Force Management and Personnel.

The Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986 directed important organizational changes. The recommendations of the Blue Ribbon Commission on Defense Management (Packard Commission) and other studies and reports foreshadowed many of these changes. The act reemphasized civilian control of the Department in the person of the Secretary of Defense, gave increased functions and powers to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and established a Vice Chairman of the JCS. It enhanced the powers of the commanders of the unified and specified commands and permitted them some participation in the budget process. Finally, Goldwater-Nichols required reorganization of the headquarters establishments of the military departments.
The Military Retirement Reform Act (1 July 1986) mandated the new position of Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, although it would not be filled until 1987. This legislation also redesignated the former Under Secretary of Defense for Research and Engineering as Director of Defense Research and Engineering, to report to the Under Secretary for Acquisition.

Changes in 1988 included the establishment of the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Special Operations and Low-Intensity Conflict (SO/LIC) and the redesignation of the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Administration as the Director of Administration and Management. The latter also continued to be dual-hatted as Director, Washington Headquarters Services. The Director of Program Analysis and Evaluation position became the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Program Analysis and Evaluation. The functions of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Research and Technology transferred to the Director of Defense Research and Engineering.

With the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989 and the dissolution of the Soviet Union in 1991, the Cold War came to an end and the Department of Defense entered a new era. For the first time since the Department came into being in 1947, it faced a world without an apparent existential international threat. The result was a period of downsizing and realignment that reflected a congressional mandate and broad public desire to “shrink” defense and achieve “peace dividends” from the conclusion of the Cold War.

While the services cut structure and manpower, the Department of Defense sought to rationalize its bureaucracy. In 1993, Secretary Les Aspin instituted a broad restructuring of the Assistant Secretary group. He eliminated four Assistant Secretary positions: International Security Affairs, International Security Policy, Force Management and Personnel, and Production and Logistics. He converted two other Assistant Secretary positions to lower levels—the Public Affairs position became an Assistant to the Secretary of Defense, and the Program Analysis and Evaluation slot became a Directorship. Aspin created six Assistant Secretary positions to replace them: Regional Security Affairs; Strategy, Requirements, and Resources; Nuclear Security and Counterproliferation; Policy and Plans; Economic Security; and Democracy and Peacekeeping. Of these, Democracy and Peacekeeping never became operative because the nominee for the office did not receive Senate confirmation. Five Assistant Secretaries reported to the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy when these changes became effective: Regional Security Affairs; Strategy, Requirements, and Resources; Nuclear Security and Counterproliferation; Policy and Plans; and SO/LIC.

the position of Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Atomic Energy as Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Nuclear, Chemical, and Biological Defense Programs. In 1999, it established the position of Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Logistics and Materiel Readiness.

Reform of the cumbersome acquisition system became a top priority in the post–Cold War era. Secretary William J. Perry led an aggressive reorganization to restructure the acquisition function. It included renaming the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition as the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology, coupled with the creation of the Deputy Under Secretary for Acquisition Reform. Perry also initiated a comprehensive overhaul of acquisition policies and procedures, including conforming military contracts and procurement regulations to commercial business practices where feasible, and ordering military procurement personnel to buy products and components from commercial sources to the extent possible. Notwithstanding Perry’s best efforts to contain recurring and controversial cost overruns, real progress on reforming and remedying the system remained an elusive goal.

Secretary William S. Cohen’s biggest effort in this sphere was the Defense Reform Initiative (DRI), which took its cue from the National Performance Review, an executive branch–wide reorganization effort spearheaded by Vice President Al Gore in response to President Bill Clinton’s mandate to “reinvent” government for the information age. The DRI eliminated or consolidated elements of the defense infrastructure that were considered wasteful and further reduced personnel. The number of DoD civilian defense employees fell from 768,000 in 1996 to 647,000 in 2001. Another key element involved elimination of excess base capacity. In 1988, Congress had authorized the Base Realignment and Closure (BRAC) process to insulate major installation decisions from political interference. BRAC commissions in 1988, 1991, 1993 and 1995 brought substantial efficiencies to DoD’s large portfolio of installations.

Building on his predecessor’s reforms in the acquisition area, Secretary Cohen continued efforts to make DoD more businesslike by encouraging the adoption of successful commercial practices. The DRI focused on day-to-day improvements in the Pentagon’s management and administration such as implementing electronic commercial processes like credit cards, moving toward a paperless work environment, adopting performance measurements such as scorecards and metrics, and instituting methods for improving financial accounting capabilities. To oversee the DRI, Secretary Cohen created the Defense Management Council, consisting of both DoD and industry leaders and a Defense Reform Office. The DRI also drew on the expertise of Deputy Secretary of Defense John J. Hamre, who had 10 years of experience at the Senate Armed Services Committee, during which he was primarily responsible for oversight and evaluation of procurement, research, and development programs, defense budget issues, and relations with the Senate Appropriations Committee.

As part of the DRI’s streamlining emphasis, Secretary Cohen attempted to restructure several OSD offices, including the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence (ASD[C3I]). Initially, the DRI recommended disbanding the C3I post, creating a separate Assistant Secretary of Defense for Intelligence, and shifting the C3 functions to the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology. Secretary Cohen dropped the proposal, however, to avoid controversy and the lengthy congressional approval process. Instead, the ASD(C3I) gained significant new functions, including oversight of reconnaissance programs and responsibility for space matters, a consequence of the 1997 reorganization of DoD space management functions and the disestablishment of the short-lived Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Space.

The Cohen era also witnessed the institutionalization of the Quadrennial Defense Review (QDR) process mandated by Congress in the FY97 NDAA. Congressional intent was for the QDR to serve as a basic planning tool by which DoD, at regular intervals, could evaluate and adjust defense strategy, force structure, and budgets. The act established an independent National Defense Panel consisting of former senior officials to review the QDR. Unlike earlier comprehensive defense reviews, the QDR became a periodic but integral part of the DoD planning process.

The century ended with growing concern over the terrorist threat from rogue states and increasingly more radical Islamic fundamentalism—a spectrum of conflict that the United States was ill equipped to handle. Spurred on by the 1993 bombing of New York’s World Trade Center, the 1996 destruction of the Air Force quarters in Khobar Towers in Saudi Arabia, and the 2000 attack on the USS Cole in a Yemeni port, strategic planners in and outside of the Department perceived a need to institute further changes in DoD’s internal management, military command structure, and interagency relationships. Legislation passed in October 2000 directed the Secretary of Defense to assign responsibility to an Assistant Secretary for providing overall direction and supervision of policy, program planning, and execution of DoD activities for combating foreign and domestic terrorism.

When President George W. Bush took office in January 2001, the Department that served the nation well during the Cold War struggled when trying to keep pace with the emerging strategic challenges in the post–Cold War era. Recognizing the profound changes taking place, newly appointed Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld undertook a wide-ranging effort to modernize the Department, the military services, and warfighting capabilities. He called for a thorough transformation of how the Department managed change and conducted business, based on the notion that rapid increases in technology compelled near-revolutionary changes in organization, capabilities, and strategies. Although this concept had emerged during the Clinton administration with the title of Revolution in Military Affairs, Rumsfeld adopted it, seeking not only to bring DoD into the information age but also to refashion the defense establishment and its culture.

The events of 11 September 2001 gave great urgency to reform initiatives, as these attacks seemingly validated the assertions of transformation proponents that revolutionary change was necessary if the United States were to defend itself at home and abroad. By October 2001, OSD had created the Office of Force Transformation as “an agent for entrepreneurial and experimental thinking in defense policy and technology.”

In the wake of the 9/11 terrorist attacks, defense spending surged as the retrenchment of the 1990s gave way to a commitment to the “global war on terrorism.” Military operations, first in Afghanistan in 2001 and then in Iraq in 2003, required increased defense funding and personnel. Between FY02 and FY05, defense budgets and military and civilian manpower climbed steadily. At the same time, DoD sought to transform military forces, convert unneeded capacity into additional warfighting capability, and reduce infrastructure costs through the 2005 BRAC. The 2005 BRAC, the fifth effort since the process was initiated in 1988, served as a mechanism to rationalize infrastructure in light of new defense strategies and a changed threat environment. The 2005 BRAC Commission reviewed stateside and overseas military forces and infrastructure and was the first BRAC to have a significant impact on the National Guard. The 2005 BRAC also moved to regularize future efforts by recommending a BRAC round in 2015 and every 8 years thereafter.

The central objective in the Department’s reform program was to reshape the armed forces and warfighting capabilities to better manage new types of threats emerging in the post–Cold War, post-9/11 world. The Army, in particular, redesigned its force structure into units that were smaller, lighter, more easily deployed, and better suited to asymmetric or irregular warfare. Changes in force structure and doctrine often pivoted on network-centric warfare—a reliance on computer and telecommunications technology to help operational commands share information almost instantaneously over long distances.

While much of the focus centered on the structure of the military forces and the way they fought, many initiatives grappled with Defense-wide reorganization and administrative processes. The Department was under pressure from Congress to improve its business and financial processes, just as it had been during the Clinton administration. In 2001, the Department initiated a financial and business modernization program as part of the transformation agenda. The program expanded significantly over the coming years to accommodate new legislative requirements and U.S. General Accounting Office recommendations. Given Secretary Rumsfeld’s determination to further advance the Department into the information age, many new bureaucratic processes mirrored the notion of network-centric warfare, relying on increased automation and capabilities for... sharing information electronically across components, particularly through “enterprise architecture.”

Secretary Rumsfeld’s transformation also took aim at his own office, OSD, and he made several significant changes to it, including replacing the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization with the Missile Defense Agency in 2002, dismantling the ASD(C3I) organization in May 2003, and creating the position of Assistant Secretary of Defense for Networks and Information Integration (ASD[NII]), which assumed all information technology functions as well as the DoD Chief Information Officer function. The Pentagon billed the reorganization as a sweeping reform that would bolster major computer technology initiatives and improve managerial oversight through consolidation. The ASD(NII) was an adviser to the Secretary and Deputy Secretary of Defense on technical matters related to telecommunications and security, as well as on non-intelligence space matters.

Changes made in the OSD intelligence arena were among the most significant. In the wake of the terrorist attacks and the 9/11 Commission’s critique of the national Intelligence Community, Secretary Rumsfeld dramatically expanded DoD intelligence capabilities. In 2003, DoD upgraded the Pentagon’s intelligence function when it established the new Under Secretary of Defense for Intelligence (USD[I]) position authorized by Congress, achieving what Secretary Cohen had wanted 10 years earlier. This brought the number of Under Secretary positions to five. The USD(I) would exercise authority, direction, and control over all intelligence and intelligence-related activities within the Department and serve as the Secretary’s single point of contact for other government agencies on intelligence matters. In 2005, via an executive order, President Bush changed the longstanding order of succession within DoD, making the USD(I) third in line, after the Deputy Secretary, and bumping the service Secretaries further down the chain.

The Department of Defense also expanded the military’s intelligence-gathering capabilities, a controversial move that some interpreted as impinging on the functions of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). The Pentagon argued that military commanders in the field had different intelligence needs and interests than the CIA. Secretary Rumsfeld created several new entities, including the Strategic Support Branch, under the Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA), to carry out human intelligence (HUMINT) activities. These actions received scrutiny from members of Congress as to whether the Department was misinterpreting laws governing requirements for notifying Congress about defense intelligence missions.

The Office of the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy also underwent restructuring. Already among the largest OSD components, with a broad range of functions and several tiers of management, the Policy office expanded in March 2003 to include the newly created position of Assistant Secretary of Defense for Homeland Defense, as mandated by the FY03 NDAA signed in December 2002. The new Assistant Secretary’s main function was to coordinate with the new Department of Homeland Security, created in 2003 by a consolidation of multiple Federal agencies.
Secretary Rumsfeld further restructured the Policy office beginning in 2006 to align with the new security priorities of the ongoing global war on terror. The reorganization was meant to enable the military to better “respond to transnational threats, manage international military coalitions, and equip partner nations to fight terrorists.” Additional goals were to balance the responsibilities of the Assistant Secretaries of Defense in Policy, more closely align them with organizational counterparts in the Joint Staff and Department of State, and establish a focal point in Policy for each combatant commander. Three principal changes were rearrangement of the portfolios of three Assistant Secretaries to cover regional responsibilities, creation of the new position of Assistant Secretary of Defense for Global Security Affairs to focus on issues cutting across regional lines, and expansion of the role of the renamed Assistant Secretary of Defense for Special Operations and Low-intensity Conflict and Interdependent Capabilities to include oversight of force transformation and such strategic capabilities as nuclear weapons and long-range missiles. The renamed Assistant Secretary of Defense for Homeland Defense and Americas’ Security Affairs assumed responsibility for the Western Hemisphere, while the new Assistant Secretary of Defense for Asian and Pacific Security Affairs took responsibility for those regions, and the Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs maintained responsibility for Africa and the Middle East and regained Europe from the now-defunct Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Policy.

The Department’s transformation efforts also encompassed changes to the military command structure. A 2002 update of the Unified Command Plan established U.S. Northern Command (USNORTHCOM). By October 2002, just over a year after 9/11, USNORTHCOM assumed control of homeland defense and responsibility for coordinating DoD support to civil authorities, consolidating missions previously executed by other DoD organizations. Subject to the Posse Comitatus Act, USNORTHCOM has a broad range of functions, from assisting civil authorities with disaster relief operations and providing support for counterdrug operations to managing responses in the event of a terrorist attack employing weapons of mass destruction.

Another of Secretary Rumsfeld’s top priorities was enhancing the military services’ joint operations capabilities. He strengthened U.S. Joint Forces Command (USJFCOM), created in 1999 under Secretary Cohen to replace U.S. Atlantic Command. USJFCOM now gained the mission “to lead the transformation of U.S. military joint war fighting into the 21st Century.” The 2002 UCP shifted the command’s geographic area of responsibility so that it could focus on this mandate.

The 2002 UCP also reorganized U.S. Strategic Command (USSTRATCOM). First established in 1992 as a successor to Strategic Air Command, USSTRATCOM merged with U.S. Space Command to allow for more centralized command and control of the nation’s space-based assets. USSTRATCOM assumed new and previously unassigned responsibilities relating to global strike, missile defense integration, information operations, and those operations relating to command, control, communications, computers, intelligence, surveillance, and reconnaissance. The command also took over the mission of coordinating the Pentagon’s efforts to combat weapons of mass destruction and the strategic aspects of terrorism. Over the next few years, USSTRATCOM’s responsibilities expanded to include threats and attacks on the new frontier of cyberspace.

During Secretary Rumsfeld’s tenure, U.S. Special Operations Command (USSOCOM) underwent the most significant changes to its mission and organization since its inception in 1987. The command expanded overall, as did the operational scope of its units, becoming a key component in the global war on terror. Whereas USSOCOM had functioned as a supporting command, in 2003 Secretary Rumsfeld announced that it could now plan and execute its own missions. The 2004 UCP further gave USSOCOM unprecedented authority to plan, synchronize, and execute global operations against terrorist networks, in coordination with the other combatant commanders.

The events of 9/11 and the conflicts in Afghanistan and Iraq had added a sense of urgency to the need for change in the Department but also simultaneously had drawn the focus of the leadership away from the task of transformation. Although Secretary Rumsfeld achieved a number of major initiatives, the transformation program, billed as wholesale reinvention, did not occur as speedily or as completely as he desired. Late in 2006 he closed the Office of Force Transformation, parceling out its functions to other offices in OSD in an attempt to embed the process in the mainstream bureaucracy.

In December 2006, Dr. Robert Gates became the 22nd Secretary of Defense and the second former Director of Central Intelligence to occupy the office. Gates initially took a more modest approach to change, focusing on current operations and challenges.

One casualty was the National Security Personnel System (NSPS), among the most contentious reforms of the Rumsfeld years. Conceived as a pay-for-performance system that would come into full force by mid-2006, NSPS replaced the General Schedule (GS) grade and step system for civilian employees with pay bands intended to provide more flexibility in establishing pay levels and incentives. From the outset, NSPS generated a significant amount of controversy. In March 2009, Defense and Office of Personnel Management officials announced that they would undertake a review of the pay system. Simultaneously, there was pressure from Congress to revise the system. In June 2009, the House added provisions to the FY10 NDAA, giving the Secretary of Defense 6 months to decide if keeping the program was warranted. On the advice of the Secretary, in October 2009 President Barack Obama signed the NDAA repealing the NSPS, restoring DoD employees to their previous pay system, and requiring DoD to start moving people out of NSPS within 6 months and completely end it no later than 1 January 2012.

Secretary Gates also slowed the Pentagon’s expansion in the intelligence realm. He worked to smooth and clarify the relationship between DoD and the Director of National Intelligence (DNI), signing a memorandum of agreement that made the USD(I) a principal adviser to the DNI. Gates continued to emphasize HUMINT capabilities and counterintelligence, establishing the new Defense Counterintelligence and Human Intelligence Center under the control of DIA to combine responsibility for the related functions.
Gates also made a number of other changes to the OSD structure during his tenure. He renamed the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Global Security Affairs as the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Global Strategic Affairs and gave that position responsibility for the Defense Security Cooperation Agency and Defense Technology Security Administration. The counternarcotics support responsibility shifted from SO/LIC to Global Strategic Affairs at the same time.

In January 2008, Congress established the Deputy Chief Management Officer to assist the Deputy Secretary of Defense in his role as the Department’s Chief Management Officer. In October 2008, legislation established the Director of Operational Energy Plans and Programs to provide advice and coordinate actions within the Department involving the use of energy required to train, move, and sustain forces. In May 2009, the Weapon Systems Acquisition Reform Act renamed the Director of Program Analysis and Evaluation as the Director of Cost Assessment and Program Evaluation, elevating it to a PAS position. In December 2010 Congress redesignated the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Nuclear and Chemical and Biological Defense Programs as an Assistant Secretary of Defense.

In October 2009, Congress capped the number of Deputy Under Secretaries of Defense at a total of five, each serving as the Principal Deputy to one of the Under Secretaries of Defense. The same legislation changed the Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Logistics and Materiel Readiness to an Assistant Secretary of Defense and created an Assistant Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, producing a total of 12 Assistant Secretaries and a total of 54 PAS positions in the Department.

The FY11 NDAA (PL 111–383) implemented numerous title changes. Most of the new designations involved changing Directors and an Assistant to the Secretary to Assistant Secretaries of Defense, creating new executive-level positions and making some existing executives statutorily required PAS officials. This legislation also required several derivative changes, mainly in eliminating certain titles over time and converting a number of DUSDs to Deputy Assistant Secretaries of Defense. One consequence of the many changes authorized by the FY10 and FY11 NDAAAs was a modification of the order of precedence whereby the Deputy Chief Management Officer takes precedence in the Department after the Under Secretaries of Defense.

Secretary Gates’s tenure also brought reorientation of the combatant commands. After several years of planning, U.S. Africa Command (USAFRICOM) came into existence in 2008. Conceived as a different type of command, its primary purpose was to help prevent the outbreak of war rather than to fight one. Working in partnership with other U.S. agencies, particularly the Department of State and developmental agencies, USAFRICOM’s main goals are to promote economic and political stability, improve the quality of life across the continent, and defeat or preclude terrorist activities. Following an unsuccessful attempt to position the new command in Africa, USAFRICOM remained headquartered in Stuttgart, Germany. The two additional major changes regarding the combatant commands were the June 2009 establishment of U.S. Cyber Command (USCYBERCOM) as a subunified command of USSTRATCOM, and the disestablishment of USJFCOM during 2011.
During the last year of his tenure, Secretary Gates began calling for a fundamental change in the way the Department operated. The 9/11 attacks had opened a “gusher of defense spending that nearly doubled [DoD’s] base budget,” Gates noted in May 2010, but those days were fast coming to an end. The kind of regular real growth that would be required to support the force structure that had arisen in the past decade was not likely to be forthcoming given a faltering economy, the Federal debt, and other demands on Federal spending.

Gates pointed to several areas ripe for reform: weapons designed without regard to cost or the capabilities of our enemies; congressional mandates to purchase unwanted items; a health care system whose exponentially rising costs were “eating the Defense Department alive;” and a bloated and cumbersome bureaucracy overreliant on contractors taking up an estimated 40 percent of the DoD budget. In August 2010, Gates took several steps to change the way the Department conducted its business. He advised President Obama to veto any legislation that included unwanted items, such as a second F–35 engine or more C–17 cargo planes. He instituted a 3-year freeze in the number of OSD, defense agency, and combatant command positions, and froze the number of civilian Senior Executive Service appointments, flag and general officers, and PAS positions within the Department, pending a baseline review. Further, he ordered a reduction in funding for service support contractors by 10 percent annually in each of the next 3 years, as well as a 10 percent reduction in intelligence advisory and assistance contracts to contain needless duplication within the Department’s Intelligence Community. Lastly, Gates focused on the number of internally generated studies and appealed to Congress to reduce the volume of legislatively mandated reports.

Despite these aggressive initiatives, Secretary Gates nonetheless recognized that changing the culture of the Department was a project that would take years. Yet “instilling habits of restraint, of subtracting as well as adding, of elevating affordability on a par with desirability” had to start somewhere. It was critical to begin supplanting the “culture of endless money” that had taken hold, and replace it with the kind of parsimonious but sound approach to defense needs that is most often associated with the Eisenhower administration.

As the United States enters the second decade of the 21st century, there are numerous challenges facing the nation, both foreign and domestic. The increasing use of DoD forces in a variety of peacekeeping efforts, humanitarian relief, and combat operations has stretched the force thin at an ever-increasing cost. Domestically, the realization that the costs of the all-volunteer force could become unsustainable will be a significant challenge to the Department going forward.
III. Secretaries of Defense

JAMES V. FORRESTAL          17 SEPTEMBER 1947–28 MARCH 1949

- Born 15 February 1892, died 22 May 1949
- Served in U.S. Navy during World War I
- Dillon, Read, and Company, 1916–1940
- Under Secretary of the Navy, 1940–1944
- Secretary of the Navy, 1944–1947

IV. Deputy Secretaries of Defense

PL 81–36, 2 April 1949, originally established this position as Under Secretary of Defense. PL 81–216, 10 August 1949, the 1949 Amendments to the National Security Act of 1947, changed the title to Deputy Secretary of Defense.

PL 92–596, 27 October 1972, established a second Deputy position, with both Deputies performing duties as prescribed by the Secretary of Defense. The second deputy position was not filled until December 1975. PL 95–140, 21 October 1977, the law establishing two Under Secretaries of Defense, abolished the second Deputy position.

By delegation, the Deputy Secretary of Defense has full power and authority to act for the Secretary of Defense and to exercise the powers of the Secretary on any and all matters for which the Secretary is authorized to act pursuant to the law.

V. Under Secretaries of Defense

PL 95–0140, 21 October 1977, established the position of Under Secretary of Defense at a level immediately below the Deputy Secretary of Defense. The two initial appointees to this rank were the Under Secretary for Policy and the Under Secretary for Research and Engineering, the latter replacing the Director of Defense Research and Engineering. The Military Reform Act of 1986, PL 99–348, 1 July 1986, established the position of Under Secretary for Acquisition as the successor to the Under Secretary for Research and Engineering, with enhanced rank (from Executive Level III to Executive Level II) and functions. A few months later, the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997, PL 99–661, 14 November 1986, spelled out in more detail the duties of the Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition). See the Under Secretary listings below for subsequent changes in the title of this position.

The five current Under Secretary positions are listed alphabetically.

A. Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics

PL 95–140, 21 October 1977, created the position of Under Secretary of Defense (Research and Engineering) to replace the Director of Research and Engineering (see part VI.B.7, Former Assistant Secretary of Defense Positions, Research and Engineering, for predecessors of this position). Position abolished in 2006 with responsibilities reassigned to other Assistant Secretaries of Defense.

Assistant Secretary of Defense (Nuclear Security and Counterproliferation)

Assistant Secretary of Defense (Global Security Affairs)

New position reporting to the Under Secretary of Defense (Policy) as a result of reorganization of the Office of the Under Secretary of Defense (Policy) announced in September 2006 and implemented by August 2007. Although its responsibilities apparently were never enshrined in a directive, the office focused on building the defense capabilities of partners and allies, coalition affairs, technology security policy, security cooperation, counternarcotics, counterproliferation, detainee affairs, and prisoner of war/missing in action issues. DOD Directive 2060.02, 19 April 2007, describes the responsibilities of the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Global Security Affairs) for responses to weapons of mass destruction incidents. Position renamed Assistant Secretary of Defense (Global Strategic Affairs) and altered in scope in 2009.

Assistant Secretary of Defense (Strategy and Threat Reduction)

Position established on 6 July 1993, as Assistant Secretary of Defense (Strategy, Requirements, and Resources). The title subsequently changed to Assistant Secretary of Defense (Strategy and Requirements) in March 1995 and then to Assistant Secretary of Defense (Strategy and Threat Reduction) in February 2000. Primarily responsible for defense strategy and ensuring that DoD’s resource allocation, force structure development, weapons acquisition planning, and budgeting process support the strategy. Position dropped in 2001.

Edward L. Warner 1 June 1993–29 September 2000

Assistant Secretary of Defense (Policy and Plans)

10. Supply, Logistics, and Installations

Thomas J. Hargrave 30 September 1947–20 September 1948
Donald F. Carpenter 21 September 1948–30 June 1949
Hubert E. Howard 25 November 1949–18 September 1950
John D. Small 16 November 1950–20 January 1953

Reorganization Plan No. 6, 30 June 1953, abolished the Munitions Board and transferred its functions to the Secretary of Defense and through him to the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Applications Engineering) (see part VI.B.7, Former Assistant Secretary of Defense Positions, Research and Engineering) and the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Supply and Logistics).

Director of Installations

Position created by PL 82–534, 14 July 1952.

Frank Creedon 25 August 1952–29 June 1953
Position abolished by Reorganization Plan No. 6, 30 June 1953, and functions transferred to Assistant Secretary of Defense (Properties and Installations).

Assistant Secretary of Defense (Properties and Installations)

Franklin G. Floete 3 August 1953–4 March 1956
Floyd S. Bryant 2 May 1956–20 January 1961

Assistant Secretary of Defense (Supply and Logistics)

Position established following Reorganization Plan No. 6, 30 June 1953, when Munitions Board was abolished.

Charles S. Thomas 5 August 1953–2 May 1954
Thomas P. Pike 3 May 1954–27 June 1956
E. Perkins McGuire 28 December 1956–20 January 1961

This position and that of Assistant Secretary of Defense (Properties and Installations) combined to form the position of Assistant Secretary of Defense (Installations and Logistics), announced earlier but officially established on 30 January 1961 in DoD Directive 5126.22.

Assistant Secretary of Defense (Installations and Logistics)

Thomas D. Morris 29 January 1961–11 December 1964
Paul R. Ignatius 23 December 1964–31 August 1967
Thomas D. Morris 1 September 1967–1 February 1969
Barry J. Shillito 1 February 1969–1 February 1973
John J. Bennett (Acting) 1 April 1975–9 February 1976
Frank A. Shrontz 10 February 1976–19 January 1977

Position abolished on 22 April 1977. Acquisition functions transferred to the Director of Defense Research and Engineering and other responsibilities transferred to Assistant Secretary of Defense (Manpower, Reserve Affairs, and Logistics), changing to Assistant Secretary of Defense (Manpower, Installations, and Logistics). In 1985, the new Assistant Secretary of Defense (Acquisition and Logistics) assumed the installation and logistics functions.

Assistant Secretary of Defense (Development and Support)

Established officially by DoD Directive 5129.4, 25 November 1984, and abolished when Assistant Secretary of Defense (Acquisition and Logistics) was established.

James P. Wade 6 August 1984–5 July 1985

Assistant Secretary of Defense (Acquisition and Logistics)

James P. Wade 5 July 1985–3 November 1986
Robert B. Costello 13 March 1987–15 April 1987

This position was disestablished in April 1987 and replaced by Assistant Secretary of Defense (Production and Logistics).

Assistant Secretary of Defense (Production and Logistics)

Principal staff assistant for the Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition and Technology) in areas of his responsibility. Coordinated with Under Secretary of Defense (Policy) on agreements with foreign countries.

Robert B. Costello 15 April 1987–17 December 1987
Colin McMillan 5 March 1990–11 December 1992

As a result of reorganization of the office of the Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition and Technology), an Assistant Secretary (Economic Security) position was established, per memorandum of 19 May 1993, replacing the position of Assistant Secretary of Defense (Production and Logistics).

Assistant Secretary of Defense (Economic Security)

Position established 7 September 1993, replacing the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Production and Logistics). The position reported to the Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition and Technology).

DoD Directive 5134.7, 5 April 1996, cancelled DoD Directive 5134.7, 21 August 1995, stating that the directive for this position has served the “purpose for which it was intended and is no longer required.”
VII. Specified Officials*

Over time Congress has created a number of senior positions that fall in rank between the Under Secretaries of Defense and the Assistant Secretaries of Defense as well as a number of positions that are non-Presidentially Appointed Senate-Confirmed (PAS) principal staff assistants to the Secretary of Defense. For the sake of simplicity, these positions are listed together in this section. The Deputy Chief Management Officer is first in order of seniority under the statute governing the composition of OSD and under Executive Order 13533 (1 March 2010), which establishes the order of succession within DoD. The relative seniority of the other positions differs between the statute, the order of succession, and their respective executive pay level, so the order of the list below does not reflect precedence for any of these purposes.

*Not comprehensive; listing order does not reflect order of succession

A. Deputy Chief Management Officer of the Department of Defense

This position was established by NDAA FY08, PL 110–181 (28 January 2008). The Deputy Secretary of Defense serves as the Chief Management Officer of the Department of Defense and is assisted in this capacity by a Deputy Chief Management Officer. The Secretary shall assign such duties and authorities to the Deputy Chief Management Officer as are necessary for that official to assist the Chief Management Officer to effectively and efficiently organize the business operations of the Department of Defense. The office stood up 9 October 2008 and is governed by DOD Directive 5105.82, 17 October 2008. Congress further stipulated in Section 904 of NDAA FY09, PL 110–417 (14 October 2008) that the Deputy Chief Management Officer should serve as Vice Chairman of the Defense Business Management Committee and act as Chairman in the Deputy Secretary’s absence. The Deputy Chief Management Officer ranks in precedence just after the Under Secretaries and is paid at the same rate (Level III of the Executive Schedule).

(See also section VI.B.3.)

Terry Halvorsen III (Acting) 21 May 2014–Present
VIII. Secretaries of the Military Departments

The National Security Act of 1947 established three military departments—the Department of the Army (renaming of the former War Department), the Department of the Navy (comprised of the Navy and Marine Corps), and the newly created Department of the Air Force. All three were executive departments, each headed by a Secretary. The amendments of 1949 (PL 81–216, 10 August 1949) changed the status of the departments from “executive” to “military,” the Secretaries thus giving up their seats in the Cabinet and the National Security Council. On 31 December 1958, the Secretary of Defense issued DoD Directive 5100.1 establishing two command lines, one for operational direction of the armed forces through the JCS to unified and specified commands and the second for the direction of support activities through the Secretaries of the military departments.

IX. Joint Chiefs of Staff

The Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS), in existence since 1942, gained statutory sanction in the National Security Act of 1947. Under this law the JCS initially consisted of the Chief of Staff, U.S. Army; the Chief of Naval Operations; the Chief of Staff, U.S. Air Force; and the Chief of Staff to the Commander in Chief, if there should be such a position. The act also established a Joint Staff under the JCS, limiting it to 100 officers, to be headed by a director appointed by the Joint Chiefs.

The 1949 amendments to the National Security Act of 1947 established the position of Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to be appointed from the regular officers of the Armed Services for a term of 2 years with eligibility for a second 2-year term. The Chairman presided over the meetings of the JCS but did not have a vote. Moreover, he was not authorized to exercise military command over the JCS or any of the military services. The amendments also increased the size of the Joint Staff to 210 officers.

In 1952, PL 82–416 authorized the Commandant of the Marine Corps to meet with the JCS as a coequal whenever any matter of concern to the Marine Corps was under consideration. Subsequently, PL 95–485 (20 October 1978) made the Commandant a permanent and fully participating member of the JCS.

Reorganization Plan No. 6 of 1953 made the selection and tenure of members of the Joint Staff subject to the approval of the Chairman and gave him management control of the Joint Staff. The Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1958 increased the Joint Staff to 400 officers and limited their tours of duty to 3 years except in time of war. The act specified that the Joint Staff “shall not operate or be organized as an overall Armed Forces General Staff and shall have no executive authority.” The 1958 act also gave the Chairman a vote in JCS meetings.

Congress in PL 90–22 (5 June 1967) set the terms of the chiefs of the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps at 4 years, with provision for possible reappointment for 4 years in time of war or emergency.

The Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986 prescribed the most important changes in the JCS organization since 1947. It increased the responsibilities of the Chairman, naming him the principal adviser to the President, the National Security Council, and the Secretary of Defense and prescribing a 2-year term with possibility of two additional terms (other than during wartime, when there would be no limitation). The Chairman's responsibilities included assisting the President in providing strategic direction of the Armed Forces, preparing strategic plans and joint logistic and mobility plans, and advising the Secretary of Defense on requirements, programs, and budgets, particularly a budget proposal for activities of each unified and specified combatant command.

The act created the position of Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to rank after the Chairman and ahead of all other officers of the Armed Forces and to come from a service other than that of the Chairman. The Vice Chairman could participate in meetings of the JCS, although he was not a member. In the absence or disability of the Chairman, the Vice Chairman would replace him. The National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993, PL 102–484 (23 October 1992) made the Vice Chairman a full member of the JCS.
