for the Office of the Secretary of Defense 29

“The Secretary of Defense’s primary role is to ensure the national security . . . [and] it is one of the more difficult jobs anywhere in the world. He has to be a mini-Secretary of State, a procurement expert, a congressional relations expert. He has to understand the budget process. And he should have some operational knowledge.”

former Secretary of Defense*

HISTORICAL ORIGINS OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

The 1947 National Security Act (P.L. 80-253) created the position of Secretary of Defense with authority to establish general policies and programs for the National Military Establishment. Under the law, the Secretary of Defense served as the principal assistant to the President in all matters relating to national security.

The 1949 National Security Act Amendments (P.L. 81-216) redefined the Secretary of Defense's role as the President's principal assistant in all matters relating to the Department of Defense and gave him full direction, authority, and control over the Department.

Under the 1947 law and the 1949 Amendments, the Secretary was appointed from civilian life provided he had not been on active duty as a commissioned officer within ten years of his nomination.

In order for General George C. Marshall to serve as Secretary of Defense in 1950, Congress passed P.L. 81-788 waiving the restriction against nominating an active-duty commissioned officer. This law was only effective for the duration of General Marshall's term as Secretary. General James Mattis received a similar waiver through P.L. 115-2 in 2017.

Several Defense Department reorganization plans, including Reorganization Plan No. 6 (1953), the Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1958 (P.L. 85-599), and the Goldwater-Nichols Act of 1986 (P.L. 99-433), strengthened the Secretary of Defense's authority.

Public Law 110-181, the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2008, amended the eligibility requirements for the Secretary and Deputy Secretary of Defense. The Secretary and Deputy may not have been on active duty as commissioned officers within seven years of their nominations.

HISTORY OF THE POSITIONAL COLORS FOR THE OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Section 202(c) of the 1947 National Security Act directed the Secretary of Defense to “cause a seal of office to be made for the National Military Establishment, of such design as the President shall approve, and judicial notice shall be taken thereof.”

In October 1947, President Harry S. Truman approved the design for the seal for the National Military Establishment and the flag for the Office of the Secretary of Defense. The emblem of the American eagle facing to its right with horizontal wings, clutching three crossed arrows and bearing a red, white and blue shield, was part of the design for the seal for the National Military Establishment and the re-designated Department of Defense in 1949.

The Secretary of Defense’s flag is medium blue with the embroidered eagle in its center and with a white, five-pointed star, with one point upward in each of the four corners. The flag is trimmed on three edges with a knotted fringe of white silk. Cord and tassel are of blue and white strands.

According to the 1947 press release from the Office of the Secretary of Defense, the eagle facing to its right indicates honor. “The eagle is defending the United States, represented by the shield of thirteen pieces. The thirteen pieces are joined together by the blue chief, representing the Congress. The three arrows are collectively symbolic of the three component parts of the National Military Establishment.”

The Heraldic Section of the Office of the Quartermaster General of the Army, under the supervision of Arthur E. DuBois, Mrs. James Forrestal, Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Air John Nicholas Brown, Miss Elizabeth Will of the Heraldic Section, and personnel in the Office of the Secretary of Defense contributed to the development of the basic theme, color scheme, and preparation of the final designs for the seal and the Secretary’s flag.
